ATLANTA, GA – Georgia based Sawnee Healthcare Group has donated 9,000 hazmat suits for frontline workers at Grady Health System who are caring for patients with COVID-19 and other infectious diseases.

“With personal protective equipment in such high demand during these unprecedented times, such a generous contribution is greatly appreciated. We are extremely thankful for this support from a valued member of the Georgia healthcare community,” said Joselyn Baker, President of the Grady Health Foundation.

“Community support like that of the Sawnee Healthcare Group is what allows us to keep making a difference here in the city of Atlanta, the region and the state. Philanthropic support of Grady’s mission to care for all in need has been and continues to be vital to our success,” added Baker.

The Grady Health Foundation works hard to increase public awareness about Grady’s unique role in the health of our city and state. Since its inception, Grady Health System has maintained its legacy and commitment to the underserved of Fulton and DeKalb counties, while also providing care for residents of the entire metro Atlanta region and Georgia. We remain focused on transforming an essential Atlanta institution into the leading public academic health center in the U.S., on every dimension of care, quality and stewardship.
